Obstetric fistula: a devastating but neglected complication of pregnancy

During the year, the continuing drive to ensure that all women have access to a skilled attendant during childbirth addressed a common but long-neglected problem: obstetric fistula. Obstetric fistula is a preventable and treatable complication of childbirth that is rarely seen in affluent societies. Elsewhere, mainly in parts of sub-Saharan Africa and Asia, at least two million women currently live with this devastating condition. This estimate is considered conservative: reliable statistics are difficult to compile as the condition is largely "hidden". Strongly associated with poverty, obstetric fistula occurs most often in poor, young, and often illiterate women and girls living in remote areas.

Obstetric fistula is also hidden for another reason. The condition occurs when obstructed labour results in an abnormal opening between the woman's vagina and bladder or rectum, causing a continuous leakage of urine or faeces. The pain and shame that follow loss of control over bodily functions, the poor hygiene, and the foul smell are compounded by stigmatization and a heightened risk of recurring infection. Those most frequently affected are usually girls who become pregnant when their pelvises are not fully developed, increasing their susceptibility to obstructed labour.

During the year, WHO issued the first comprehensive manual for the prevention and management of obstetric fistula, including advice on clinical management and procedures for surgical repair. As noted in the manual, a single simple operation can usually end the problem, allowing around 90% of affected women to return to active and fulfilling lives, including the birth of further children. The manual adopts a programmatic approach, arguing strongly for the inclusion of prevention and management of the condition as part of national programmes for the integrated management of pregnancy and childbirth. The rationale is straightforward: the factors that lead to obstetric fistula are the same as those that cause maternal morbidity and mortality and many neonatal deaths. As with other complications of childbirth, improving access to emergency obstetric care is the most important preventive measure.

In September, Liya Kebede, a fashion model who acts as the WHO Goodwill Ambassador for Maternal, Newborn and Child Health, returned to her native Ethiopia to launch the obstetric fistula manual. The event brought together medical experts and heads of state to raise awareness about the problem and motivate action. In opening the event, Ms Kebede addressed the urgent need to prevent the condition through better access to services. She also spoke about the equally urgent need for social reintegration and rehabilitation of the roughly two million women already affected.

Care for vulnerable groups

Care on the international agenda

A policy of equity calls for attention to the health needs of populations made vulnerable because of social and economic factors beyond their control. The health-related Millennium Development Goals address health conditions, strongly associated with poverty, that are expressed as high levels of morbidity and mortality.

Populations whose health is compromised by economic or social factors face many other problems that make their lives miserable yet may not show up in statistical tables. The problem is compounded by the fact that these groups usually live in remote rural areas or shantytowns and have little political voice – whether because of young or old age, gender, ethnicity, or education. The fact that their health problems are poorly documented further contributes to the low profile they receive on national and international health agendas.

Reducing childhood mortality: a "best buy" gets better

Each year, more than 10 million children die before their fifth birthday. Nearly 4 million of these deaths occur during the neonatal period. Of all these deaths, an estimated 6.5 million could be prevented using proven, cost-effective interventions. As just one example, neonatal tetanus, which has been virtually eliminated in wealthy countries for more than a century, still kills around 130 000 babies a year in impoverished areas of the world.

Immunization has long been recognized as one of public health's most successful and cost-effective interventions. In terms of reducing childhood deaths, the expansion of routine immunization services brought the greatest gains throughout the year. Support from the Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunization (GAVI Alliance), which provides funds for health and immunization in the world's poorest countries, was instrumental. WHO data for 2006 show that, with the help of the GAVI Alliance, rates of immunization coverage reached record high levels.

During the year, sub-Saharan Africa, which has lagged behind the rest of the world in immunization coverage, began to catch up. In late August, African countries, building on a 15% increase in immunization coverage since 2000, launched an ambitious region-wide strategy for doing more immediately. The new four-year plan for Africa draws on proven strategies such as the Reaching Every District (RED) approach. Developed as part of the drive to eradicate polio, where universal coverage is essential, this operational approach has proved its ability in bringing services to hard-to-reach populations. It places the responsibility for doing so firmly in the hands of district service providers and managers, thus fostering local ownership.

In most parts of the developing world, immunization services are best at reaching remote, underserved populations, thus achieving the kind of targeted access that lies at the heart of poverty-reduction strategies. In impoverished populations, these services frequently provide the first – if not the only – contact with the health system for mothers and babies. During the year, a study conducted by WHO determined that the provision of a range of interventions promoting childhood survival could be promptly expanded using the RED approach as a strategy for integrated delivery. As part of a growing trend, the great effort needed to reach these populations was used as an opportunity to deliver multiple life-saving and health-promoting interventions in addition to vaccines, thus making one of the "best buys" in public health an even better investment for health.

Immunization campaigns delivered vitamin A supplements to boost the immune system, deworming tablets to improve child growth and school performance, bednets to protect against malaria, and tetanus vaccine to protect pregnant women. In Nigeria, a country with one of the lowest rates of childhood immunization, an estimated 29 million children were reached with measles and polio vaccines, vitamin A supplements, and bednets in one of the largest health events of the year.

Little Pinki suffered for 6 long years.

Treated like an outcast, tormented by children who threw rocks at her and called her Torn Lip. Never allowed to go to school. There were times when her father thought she'd be better off dead.

Then one day, a social worker told her parents about The Smile Train. Pinki and her Dad walked 70 kilometers and she received free surgery that gave her not just a new smile, but a second chance at life.

Millions of children just like Pinki are waiting for the same life-changing surgery. Some have been waiting for 10, 15 even 25 years.

For a simple surgery that takes as little as 45 minutes—and costs as little as $250.

Congenital Diaphragmatic Hernia Induced by Nitrofen in Mice and Rats: Characteristics as Animal Model and Pathogenetic Relationship between Diaphragmatic Hernia and Lung Hypoplasia

ABSTRACT

Abstract Congenital diaphragmatic hernia (CDH) and lung hypoplasia were induced in high frequency and dose-dependently in the offspring from dams, treated orally with 2,4-dichlorophenyl-p-nitrophenyl ether (nitrofen) during pregnancy in CD-I mice and CD rats. Both in mice and rats, CDH found in the fetal and neonatal periods was a posterolateral type of diaphragmatic hernia (DH) showing a distinct side-preponderance: the left-side preponderance in mice and right-side preponderance in rats. CDH in the offspring, surviving after weaning, was mostly of retrosternal type in mice and of pericardial type in rats. CDH induced experimentally in the present study can be regarded as an excellent animal model for human CDH in terms of both anatomical features and the time of appearance of different types of CDH as well as clinical symptoms.

Lung hypoplasia was observed in the offspring with and without CDH; though its severity was greater in those with CDH. The offspring with severe lung hypoplasia died of respiratory insufficiency during the neonatal period, regardless of the presence or absence of CDH. These findings suggest that lung hypoplasia is not a consequence of CDH, but that a common pathogenetic process in the early embryonic stage might involve both lung hypoplasia and CDH.

"Safety in Paediatric Clinical Trials --a 7 Year Review" by HM Sammons, C

Gray, H Hudson , J Cherrill , and I Choonara, was published in the journal, Acta Paediatrica.

The researchers(from the University of Nottingham, UK), reviewed 739 reports of international drug trials published between 1996 and 2002.

Their findings confirm our own conclusion that the safety of children who are used in clinical trials is not being well served--there were deaths reported in 83 trials--that's 11%. Since these children were non-consenting human subjects, ALL the adults involved bear responsibility.

The authors advocate for independent safety monitoring committees--as was originally recommended by the U.S. Department of Welfare but deleted from the Federal Regulations for the protection of children (Part D of 45 CFR 46).

"There is general agreement by pediatric health professionals, regulatory authorities and the pharmaceutical industry, as well as politicians and parents, that drug trials are essential in order to improve drug therapies," Sammons said. "We are calling for all pediatric drug trials to include independent safety monitoring committees to ensure that this vital work is carried out in a way that minimizes risks and maximizes benefits for the children taking part."

ABSTRACT

Aim: The safety of clinical trials in children has not been previously studied. We aimed to identify how safety is monitored and the extent of adverse drug reactions (ADRs).

Methods: A literature review of the Medline Database for therapeutic clinical trials involving oral and intravenous medicines in children from 1996 to 2002. Papers were read to determine the safety monitoring and the presence of adverse events (AEs) or ADRs.

Results: Seven hundred thirty-nine trials were identified. Thirteen (2%) had safety monitoring committees (SMCs). Five hundred twenty-three (71%) trials reported AEs and 151 (20%) of these trials reported a serious AE. ADRs were present in 270 (36.5%) trials, with 80 (11%) of trials having a moderate or severe ADR. Six clinical trials were terminated early because of significant drug toxicity. All of these had SMCs. There were deaths in 83 (11%) trials. In the majority of trials, mortality was thought to be unrelated to the investigational drug; however, in two trials mortality was higher in the treatment group. Conclusions: About 11% of trials have a moderate or severe ADR. All paediatric clinical trials should have a SMC.

Children as Big Pharma Guinea Pigs: 98 Percent of Drug Trials on Children Have no Safety Checks

by David Gutierrez

(NaturalNews) Fewer than 2 percent of drug trials conducted on children have independent safety advisory boards, a review published in the journal Acta Paediatrica has found.

Researchers from Nottingham University reviewed reports on 739 international drug trials that had been published between 1996 and 2002. They found that although 74 percent of studies described their safety monitoring procedures, less than 2 percent included an independent safety review committee.

Such committees are composed of independent health experts who can review the study data as it comes out and warn if the drug appears to be placing study participants at risk.

"It is invaluable to have an independent monitor who can swiftly question any adverse drug reactions or differences in illness and death rates between groups taking part in the clinical trials," said lead researcher Helen Sammons. "Parents also need to be made aware of the risks of adverse drug reactions when a child takes any medicine so that they can make informed decisions that balance those risks against the possible benefits the drug may provide their child."

The Nottingham University review also suggests that independent committees lead to more rigorous safety standards. Of the 13 studies with independent review committees, six were halted early due to highly toxic drug effects.

None of the studies without independent committees were stopped early.

Although the researchers looked only at studies conducted on children, they said the statistics for adult trials are probably similar.

"There is general agreement by pediatric health professionals, regulatory authorities and the pharmaceutical industry, as well as politicians and parents, that drug trials <http://www.naturalnews.com/drug_trials.html> are essential in order to improve drug therapies," Sammons said. "We are calling for all pediatric drug trials to include independent safety monitoring committees to ensure that this vital work is carried out in a way that minimizes risks and maximizes benefits for the children taking part."

Adverse health effects were reported in the majority of drug trials, although not all of them were thought to be related to the drugs. A total of 70 percent of drug trials reviewed reported adverse effects, and 20 percent reported serious adverse effects. Almost 37 percent of drug trials reported side effects attributed to the drugs; 11 percent of trials reported moderate, severe or life-threatening side effects.

Adverse effects reported included bleeding, high blood pressure, seizures, psychosis, acute renal failure and suicide.

Deaths were reported in 11 percent of drug trials, particularly in those involving premature babies. A total of 56 percent of studies involving newborns involved deaths. Deaths were also reported in trials for drugs meant to treat infectious diseases and problems with the nervous system, respiratory system and kidneys.

Most cases of death were not thought to be caused by the drugs.

According to Sammons, the practice of conducting clinical drug trials on children is fairly new. In the past, drug companies only conducted safety tests on adults and doctors were left to guess at what drugs would work for children, and in what doses.

Five years ago, the United States began providing longer exclusive drug licenses to pharmaceutical companies that carry out drug trials on children as well as adults. In reaction to this incentive, the number of trials including children has increased. A similar incentive system is about to go into effect in the European Union.

It is important to conduct these trials, Sammons said, to decide if the benefits of drugs outweigh the risks.

"We need to test drugs on children, as the only other options are to use unlicensed drugs or prescribe drugs that have been licensed for adults," Sammons said. "But we feel that the small number of studies that reported having safety monitoring committees was unacceptable."

SERIAL KILLER BOYDEN GRAY

IN THE WHITE HOUSE UNDER THE BUSH ADMINISTRATION AS

MS. GRAY STALKING THE INNOCENT BLOOD OF PARTIAL-BIRTH ABORTIONS

YOU BE THE JUDGE!

http://www.whitehouse.gov/news/releases/2003/01/20030122-3.html

President Calls Participants of the 30th Annual March for Life on the National Mall
11:05 A.M. CST
THE PRESIDENT: Well, thank you, Nellie. I want to thank you very much for including me in the celebration of life. I want to thank the good folks there on the Mall today. I'm calling you from St. Louis, Missouri. I know there are some from Missouri there and, like many others, you've made great sacrifices to come to Washington today. A lot of you have ridden buses all night long and I know you're braving the cold. And I admire your perseverance and I admire your devotion to the cause of life.
You all are gathered today on the National Mall, which is not far from the monument to Thomas Jefferson who, as you all know, is author of our Declaration of Independence. And the March for Life upholds the self-evident truth of that Declaration -- that all are created equal, given the unalienable rights of life, and liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. And that principle of America needs defenders in every place and every generation.

In our time, respect for the right to life calls us to defend the sick and the dying, persons with disabilities and birth defects, and all who are weak and vulnerable. And this self-evident truth calls us to value and to protect the lives of innocent children waiting to be born. (Applause.)

You and I share a commitment to building a culture of life in America, and we're making progress. As the President, I have signed the Born Alive Infants Protection Act, opposed the destruction of embryos for stem cell research, and refused to spend taxpayer money on international programs that promote abortion overseas. (Applause.)

MS. GRAY: Thank you.

THE PRESIDENT: My administration is challenging the Oregon law that permits physician-assisted suicide. (Applause.)

MS. GRAY: Thank you.

THE PRESIDENT: We support abstinence education, and crisis pregnancy programs, and parental notification laws. We offer compassionate alternatives to abortion by promoting adoption and extending state health care coverage for unborn children.

My hope is that the United States Congress will pass a bill this year banning partial-birth abortion, which I will sign. (Applause.) Partial-birth abortion is an abhorrent procedure that offends human dignity. I also urge the Congress to ban all human cloning. We must not create life to destroy life. Human beings are not research material to be used in a cruel and reckless experiment. (Applause.) For 30 years, the March for Life has been sustained by constant prayer and abiding hope, that one day, every child will be born into a family that loves that child and a nation that protects that child. And when that day arrives, you will have the gratitude of millions -- especially those who know the gift of life because you cared and you kept faith. May God bless you all and may God continue to bless America.

MS. GRAY: Thank you, Mr. President.

Eunice Kennedy Shriver National Institute of Child Health and Human Development (NICHD) <http://www.nichd.nih.gov/>
For Immediate Release: Tuesday, January 13, 2009

CONTACTS: Robert Bock or Marianne Glass Miller, 301-496-5133, <e-mail: bockr@mail.nih.gov>

The National Institutes of Health announced today that the National Children's Study will begin recruiting volunteers to take part in its comprehensive study of how genes and the environment interact to affect children's health. The study will track the health and development of more than 100,000 children from before birth through to their 21st birthday.

At a briefing, NIH officials announced that the first phase of recruitment for the study will begin in Duplin County, N.C., and the New York City borough of Queens.

"The principal benefit of a large scale, long-term study like the National Children's Study is that it will uncover important health information at virtually every phase of life," said Duane Alexander, M.D., Director of NIH's Eunice Kennedy Shriver National Institute of Child Health and Human Development (NICHD), one of a consortium of federal agencies implementing the study.

"Initially, it will provide major insights into disorders of birth and infancy, such as preterm birth and its health consequences. Ultimately it will lead to a greater understanding of adult disorders, many of which are thought to be heavily influenced by early life exposures and events."

Dr. Alexander added that the large size of the study should yield information that smaller and more limited studies cannot. For example, because of the large number of individuals enrolled, the study has the capability to assess uncommon disorders, as well as how exposures to different environmental conditions and genetic factors may interact.

In addition to the NICHD, other members of the consortium carrying out the study are the NIH's National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. The National Children's Study was authorized by Congress in the Children's Health Act of 2000.

When it is fully operational, the National Children's Study is expected to have roughly 40 study centers recruiting volunteers from 105 designated study locations throughout the United States. The study locations are counties and clusters of counties chosen by National Children's Study researchers to be representative of children in the United States.

Of seven initial, or Vanguard, study centers, two will be the first to recruit. This week, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill will begin recruiting study volunteers from Duplin County, N.C.. The Mount Sinai School of Medicine in New York City will recruit volunteers from the Borough of Queens.

The centers will hold presentations and other community awareness activities in their respective locations to inform prospective volunteers. Some families in those areas will receive letters introducing the study, explained Peter Scheidt, M.D., M.P.H., director, National Children's Study. Prenatal care providers and clinics in the study locations will also inform women about the study.

In April of 2009, the remaining five Vanguard centers will also begin recruiting and enrolling women to participate in the study. At the end of 18 months, each center is expected to have recruited a total of approximately 375 volunteers.

A listing of the seven Vanguard center locations is available on the National Children's Study Web site at http://www.nationalchildrensstudy.gov/about/overview/Pages/Study-Centers-Awarded-12-18-08.pdf

Dr. Scheidt added that during this initial recruitment phase, referred to as the Vanguard cohort phase, study researchers will evaluate their recruitment and sampling methods.

"We'll look at what we've accomplished, see if our recruitment efforts were sufficient, see if our sampling methods were successful, and if we've otherwise asked the right questions to get the information we need," Dr. Scheidt said. "Along the way, we'll undertake any fine tuning that we need to in preparation for further enrollment after the Vanguard cohort phase."

The information collected during this Vanguard phase can be pooled with the data collected during later phases of the study to provide the basis for later scientific analysis.

Although the study can be expected to provide information throughout its duration, information on disorders and conditions of early life is expected within the next few years. Because the study will enroll pregnant women and, in some cases, women who are not yet pregnant, study scientists hope to identify a range of early life factors that influence later development.

"It is very exciting to reach the point at which we're beginning enrollment and data collection," Dr. Scheidt said. "Findings from the study will ultimately benefit all Americans by providing researchers, health care providers, and public health officials with information from which to develop prevention strategies, health and safety guidelines, and possibly new treatments and perhaps even cures for disease."

The two Vanguard Cohort Centers will reflect the study's representative design in their recruitment, said Dr. Barbara Entwisle, the principal investigator of the National Children's Study Center at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

"From city streets to far-flung small towns, the two Vanguard centers will capture a broad sample that's reflective of America's diversity," she said.

Dr. Entwisle explained that, unlike Queens, which is a densely populated urban area, Duplin County is a sparsely populated rural county spread out over a large area-819 square miles.

Many large hog and turkey farms are located in Duplin County, as well as the factories that process them. There are about 800 births per year in Duplin County, a small fraction of the more than 30,000 births that occur in Queens each year, she added.

"The children in the Duplin sample will be representative of other rural areas of the U.S.," Dr. Entwisle said.

The study location in Queens has a population of 2.23 million and is home to thousands of immigrants from more than 100 nations, said Dr. Philip Landrigan, principal investigator, Mount Sinai School of Medicine.

Like many urban counties in the United States, Dr. Landrigan added, Queens is disproportionately affected by many conditions for which the National Children's Study will help find environmental predecessors and information on the causes. For example, he said, in some parts of New York City, 1 in 4 children have asthma. In addition, one fifth of the city's children entering kindergarten are overweight.

The NICHD sponsors research on development, before and after birth; maternal, child, and family health; reproductive biology and population issues; and medical rehabilitation. For more information, visit the Institute's Web site at <http://www.nichd.nih.gov/>.

The National Institutes of Health (NIH) - The Nation's Medical Research Agency - includes 27 Institutes and Centers and is a component of the U. S. Department of Health and Human Services.

It is the primary federal agency for conducting and supporting basic, clinical, and translational medical research, and it investigates the causes, treatments, and cures for both common and rare diseases. For more information about NIH and its programs, visi
